1: Coon E-5 (1926-1927) 1931 MX3 Rif MX3

304 Type 4. This is called Zenatan, and is characteristic of the Beni Znassen. In the Rif it is employed in Kebdana and Beni Bu Yafer. It has likewise been used in Targuist in recent years as a partial imitation of the central Riffian technique. In Targuist its identity with the Zenatan type is purely a coincidence.

Type 5. The single cross on the left side of the nose is employed by men in the same area as that covered by the occurrence of Type 3 among women, but extends its distribution farther than the corresponding female decoration. It is found in Khebaba and Beni Mohammed of Gsennaya, sometimes in Shawia of the same tribe, in Masuna, Ait Shisher, and Kebdana. Throughout this area it is optional, except in Khebaba, where all the men use it.

Type 6. This is the modern rendering of Type 2, the modification being in the use of a cross instead of a hatched line on the forehead. Type 6 has come in during the present generation, totally displacing its predecessor, but losing ground in Galiya, where it is gradually being replaced by Type 3.

Where the tattooing on the face is of Type 1, 3, or 4, the rest of the body remains without permanent decoration; but where the facial tattooing is of Type 2 or 6, that is of central Riffian pattern, the body is likewise tattooed. Number 7 shows the design on the abdomen, thorax, and neck, number 8 on the legs, — a stripe up each side and a cross over the ankle, — and number 9 on the forearm. As a variant of number 9, and considered very stylish, are forked antennae coming off the corners of both the distal and proximal terminal bars. The tattooing on the neck reaches up to the chin, where it joins with the tattooing of the face in one continuous design reaching from the center of the lower lip almost to the navel. Care is taken in tattooing the upper of the two hatched single lines just below the breasts not to have the design encroach upon the actual skin of the breasts.

USE OF HENNA

302 Henna, that universal cosmetic stain, is used throughout the Rif, Senhaja, and Ghomara, as well as by all other peoples of Morocco. On each day of the wedding feast, the bride thrusts both hands and both feet up to the wrists and ankles into a bowl of stewed henna leaves. The groom similarly stains his hands, but not his feet. The Riffians make no geometric lines with this henna, as do the Arabs and Atlas Jews, but simply daub it on until the whole extremity is colored a consistent reddish-brown.

It is said that in the Rif henna was not used in former times, but that apple leaves and green walnut shells were employed in place of the henna leaves, which even today are entirely imported, the chief source of supply being the tribe of Dukkala, on the Atlantic seaboard of French Morocco.

[[71]] Although henna is today distributed throughout North Africa, the presence of this definite tradition would indicate that its diffusion into the Rif took place in fairly recent times, and that in the remoter sections its use was preceded by an imitative employment of other materials.

● 626 Another use of henna distinct from all ideas of beautification is as follows: when a man has shown himself cowardly in war, the women of the village seize him, rip off his shirt, and smear his back with the stain.

74--In the Aith Waryaghar, anyone who indulged in bestiality became the object of extreme derision; and as a market crier himself is a person of very low social standing, this in itself would have rubbed more salt in the wound.

75--Marriages with parallel cousins occur, but they are uncommon. In this particular instance, there was a good reason for it, as Blanco points out.

76--These cousins, again as indicated in note 17, were the boy's r-waratha, who could normally have inherited only if the boy's father had either died without issue or if he had left a daughter or daughters only. It is un-Qur'anic enough for the r-waratha to appropriate, as they often try to do, a daughter's share of the inheritance as well as their own, but for them to take over a son's share is expressly forbidden by the Shari'a, and may be regarded, in this instance, as the purest personal aggrandizement.

77--This should probably read "to one's tribe", as the notion of other tribes hardly enters the picture here. Except under an 'Abd al-Krim, how would it have been, or be, possible for a man of the Igzinnayen, for example, to feel any responsibility for a man from the Aith Waryaghar? This error may be due to a typographical error in the original text.

78--One could hardly label a sanction of 2000 duros for murder committed in a market as indicative of "lack of repressive organs". It is statements of this kind, which continually crop up, that, in conjunction with numerous factual errors, cast a small but ever-present cloud over Blanco's work, and mark him as an amateur ethnologist.

79--See La Ley Rifeña, pp. 47, 50.

they send out a couple of individuals to care for their relatives (in their absence) and tell them what has happened, and by day, they have to feed them, after which, once this is done, they start the march toward the enemy group in order to deliver the coup de main either at once or through careful skirmishing.

There is no top command, for, as the objective is clear, it is not needed. All that must be done is to write finis to the enemy. Individual desertion is shameful, booty is eagerly anticipated, and members of the war-party do not worry about the fact that there are neither rearguard services nor defense.

B) Harkas and their Formation (fragmentary):

The obligation to serve in a harka or war-party was general and accepted by all, and avoidance of harka duty was an object of censure and sanction. Any and all groups which were threatened (both internally and externally) provided variable contingents which were activated periodically. Until protectorate times, punitive expeditions organized by the Moroccan Sultans to chastise recalcitrant tribesmen were augmented by auxiliary harkas made up from the tribes through whose territory the expeditions passed. A good example was the foray undertaken by Bushta al-Baghdadi, one of the fin de siècle commanders of the Moroccan army, against the pirates of the Ibuqquyen in 1898[4]. More recently, 'Abd al-Krim solicited harkas for individual engagements; he maintained a reduced contingent, which was periodically increased, under arms. The system was one of partial mobilization with relief contingents, the number and amount of which were fixed by 'Abd al-Krim. Their recruitment and provisions were handled by their

623 Thus public
182 esteem and the ideas which such deeds provoke in others are regained;
673 they satisfy the mass of the people without having to resort to cru-
687 elty, for.....in a truly humane feeling, note c in the text shows that 685 the author of the crime must have been caught in flagrante delicto.
627 Discounting possible vengeance and not very sure of having succeeded in 623 doing so, note e in the text shows the institution of a popular tri-
554 bunal formed by two neutral individuals, two men who neither take part 671 in the agreement nor are members of the jma'th, but the fact that they have prestige in it is a maximum guarantee of the workability of the qanun in question.

623 Furthermore, the jma'th as a social unit is personified not in 621 its mqaddim, in the Arab manner, but, hostile to personal power, in a triumvirate formed by three of the legislators who took part in the meeting and who remain obligated to watch over the fulfillment of the agreement. This executive organ of power is made up of laymen, and it as much as the aforementioned tribunal is the result of popular election.

671 In the few lines which this qanun has, aside from creating a
624 a code, a tribunal and a police force, all of which are, naturally,
182 gratuitous, it creates a rural exchequer, and all this with a good, natural and admirable feeling.

182
671 It restricts, through fear of fines, damages to the small social 626 unit it represents by guaranteeing the safety of property and discard-
681 ing cravings for economic expansion at the expense of member lineages.[35]
613

671 It creates lineage authorities whose jobs are gratuitous, and,
613 always suspicious, it avoids concentration of power in the hands of one
661 person, a fact which permits neither a shade of tyranny by the latter 182 nor a bastardization of his office.

792 annual income may be claimed. Informants agreed that a figure
794 of 5% of annual income might not be an inaccurate sum for a
575 member to donate to his zariwya.
[124]

788 Aside from these rather special claims on one's sum of 484 wealth are the regular demands made by one's being a member of [179] the Islamic community. Perhaps the most difficult of these obligations for the Riffian is the hadj or pilgrimage to Hijaz, Mecca, the birthplace of Mohammed, and to Medina where he died.
[805] The hadj itself takes place between the seventh and the thirteenth of the twelfth month of the Muslim calendar, the Dhu [178] 'l-Hijja. While in former days men traveled in caravans or [509] by boat, the most popular form of locomotion today is Air Maroc which offers special rates during the period of the pilgrimage.
Although the number of Riffians making the trip is, in any one year, not proportionately large, it is a rather significant group.
[435] The investment is large, ranging from 3,000 to 6,000 dirhams, depending on the means of transportation and the time spent in [671] getting there and back. If one has a family, which is generally the case, one must (by law) leave behind enough money to provide for their expenses while the pilgrim is away. Only the older, [554] wealthier (and as a consequence most respected) Berbers can become al-Hadj, the honorific title bestowed on those who have 788 completed the journey to Mecca. The trip is not, however, com-484 pletely voluntary. If a man is prominent and in the minds of 626 the populace of the community well-off, there is a good deal of pressure placed on him, in the form of ridicule, gossip and general public disapproval, if he begs off the pilgrimage.